In 2018, the Lifeline received 2.5 million crisis calls from across the United States.

61,871 calls were from Washington.

Established in 2005

The National Suicide Prevention Lifeline is the nation’s most recognized suicide and mental health crisis line.

The Lifeline is not one large national call center. Instead, it is a network of 170 independently operated, independently funded local, regional, and state-level call centers. Currently there are 3 Lifeline-affiliated centers in Washington. They have the critical expertise and linkages to local resources callers in crisis deserve.

To participate in the Lifeline network, centers operate to the highest standards of suicide care. They do an incredible job of de-escalating crisis situations, decreasing emotional distress, and reducing suicidality.

In the event local centers are unable to answer, the Lifeline re-routes calls to backup centers in our network (both in and out-of-state).

+78% The number of Lifeline calls that needed answering by Washington call centers increased 78% from 2016 to 2018.

Why is this?

How can I help?

Of the 61,871 callers, 17,568 individuals pressed "1" to be transferred to the Veterans Crisis Line and 506 pressed "2" for Lifeline’s Spanish Language Line.

Ideally, the remaining 43,797 calls in 2018 would have been answered by Lifeline call centers in Washington.

Of those, only 31,572 calls (72%) were able to be answered in-state.

Which meant 12,225 callers in crisis were unable to be answered by a Washington call center.
In 2019, there are 3 Lifeline network call centers in Washington:

- Volunteer of America / Crisis Response Services (Everett)
- Crisis Connections (Seattle)
- Crisis Clinic of the Peninsulas (Bremerton)

Why were only 72% of 2018’s Lifeline calls in Washington answered in-state?

Lifeline call centers in Washington set the hours and coverage areas for when and where they will take Lifeline calls. They do this based on funding and staffing levels.

Most Lifeline-affiliated call centers in the U.S. (including in Washington) answer calls on other helplines in addition to the Lifeline. Despite their very best efforts, call volume can, at times, strain center capacity and callers may hang up while they wait for the next available counselor.

When local call centers are unable to answer, the Lifeline pulls the call back and sends it out of state and into our national backup center sub-network.

When calls are re-routed to centers out-of-state, Washington callers in crisis wait longer, they receive fewer linkages to effective local care, and are more likely to abandon their calls.

Research shows the Lifeline is an effective, life-saving safety net for those in crisis (Gould et al., 2007, 2013, 2015, 2017; Ramchand et al., 2016). According to a 2018 survey of Lifeline centers, almost 98% of the crisis calls are de-escalated such that costly, highly-restrictive responses from law enforcement and emergency medical services are not necessary.

The Lifeline is federally funded to manage the call routing, best practice standards, public messaging, and technical assistance for its network. However, the funds that sustain our network’s centers come from state, county and local sources. Many centers struggle to find enough funding to operate and grow.

These call centers are key components of Washington’s behavioral health systems because they represent an entry point into other levels of coordinated care. They provide critical services for Washington residents at serious risk, especially those with nowhere else to turn.

Washington Lifeline centers need expanded support and more centers are needed. You can advocate for this.

Please join the cause!

Reach out to your local centers and decision-makers in Washington.

Learn more about the Lifeline as well as how to contact your centers in Washington by visiting: http://suicidepreventionlifeline.org/our-network/